Thanks, Roland –

As you probably gleaned, the graphic was developed by Google/Downtown West consultants to illustrate the potential massing of the housing on the north side of San Fernando Street. Since the Google/Downtown West project isn't relocating light rail, I understand that their consultants didn't want to show that change and falsely imply that those changes are part of the DT West project per se.

But yes, Tim, you, and I (and hopefully many others!) know that the DISC effort sees a great deal of value in improving light rail and bringing the main LR station right to the front of the re-imagined Integrated Station, while removing this station at San Fernando Street (consolidating it with the LR station that's currently tucked in behind the station).

Best,
Jess
