John and Sylvia – Over the last month, Reporter Jody Meacham at SV Business Journal has been asking many questions about the City’s parking requirements. His question now is:

Google’s filing in August for its downtown project calls for 6.5 million square feet of office space, 500,000 square feet of retail and between 3,000 and 5,000 housing units. If they had proposed this in the “old days,” i.e. 20 years ago, how much parking would city zoning codes have required them to build?

I told him it might be Tuesday before we could respond and he seemed fine with that.

Please signal to me that you’ve received this and will work on a response.

Y’all,

Google’s filing in August for its downtown project calls for 6.5 million square feet of office space, 500,000 square feet of retail and between 3,000 and 5,000 housing units.

If they had proposed this in the “old days,” i.e. 20 years ago, how much parking would city zoning codes have required them to build?
