Jody, I'm forwarding your question to Planners who deal with parking requirements. If we can't respond by this afternoon, due to the Monday holiday, it will be Tuesday when we get back to you.

Y'all,

Google's filing in August for its downtown project calls for 6.5 million square feet of office space, 500,000 square feet of retail and between 3,000 and 5,000 housing units.

If they had proposed this in the “old days,” i.e. 20 years ago, how much parking would city zoning codes have required them to build?
